Forecast For Southwest England
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Wednesday 08 Sep 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Cloud but dry to start, Turing showery or stormy later.

Today:
A cloudy morning for most with showers, mainly across the southwest peninsula. By late morning the showers will become more frequent and heavier, giving some thundery downpours. Drier, sunnier and still very warm in the far northeast. Breezy. Maximum temperature 27 deg C (81 deg F).

Tonight:
Staying quite cloudy and mild overnight with further showers pushing northwards across the southwest. Showers may be heavy and thundery at times. Minimum temperature 16 deg C (61 deg F).

Thursday:
A mixture of sunshine and showers on Thursday with showers heavy at times and, again, bringing the risk of some thundery downpours during the afternoon. Maximum temperature 24 deg C (75 deg F).

Outlook for Friday to Sunday:
Friday unsettled with further showers, potentially heavy, throughout the day. Conditions improving from the south and west late in the day, leading to a generally fine and dry weekend.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.